

FRIDAY, AUGUST 14, 1835.

We have concluded, on the First Page, the publication of the Address of the Committee of the Baltimore Convention.

The tenth number of "LEON" is in type, and omitted for want of room.

The Baltimore Riots.—Effectual measures were taken on Monday to rescue the city from the domination of the mob. The Republican of Tuesday morning says—

"A town meeting was held yesterday morning, at the Exchange, at which a resolution was adopted to raise the American flag and pass through the streets to toward's Park, for the purpose of raising an effectual force to put down the riots, by an array of strength sufficient to accomplish the purpose by force, if force must be resorted to. Gen. Samuel Smith, now in his 84th year, was sent for, who repaired with the rest of the meeting to the place designated, where it was determined to hold meetings in the different wards for the purpose of organizing their forces, and appearing in readiness to act efficiently in case their aid should be required. A meeting was also held by the city council, upon a call of the Mayor to adopt measures suitable to meet the emergency of the occasion."

"It was reported last evening that preparations were making for an attack upon the house of Col. Finley, in Franklin street, and a detachment was sent off to prevent its being carried into effect. Several houses, it is said, have been marked out for an attack, from some of which the furniture was removed yesterday. The number of men under arms last night was about two thousand, and the most determined spirit to suppress any thing like riot was evinced. The report respecting an attack upon Col. Finley's house proved to be incorrect, and no disturbance of any kind occurred. We trust that the difficulty is now at an end; but the intention is to keep up, for some time, an organized force to provide against a renewal of the disorders."

"Since the above was written, the Mayor has resigned his office, and the discharge of the duties of the station has devolved upon Gen. Anthony Mittenberger, as President of the First Branch of the City Council. At the meetings in the different wards the citizens formed themselves into companies, which were placed under the direction of Gen. Smith, with arms, to be employed in case of necessity. The fire companies all turned out in the afternoon, with their apparatus, and the stores were generally shut, and all business suspended at 4 o'clock.

An order has been issued by General Smith, Commander of the Third Division of Maryland Militia, calling out the Division for the service aforesaid, to assemble at the City Hall, where arms would be furnished to them. Numbers of citizens are now answering the requisition, and receiving arms.

Ten o'clock, P. M.—Corps of citizens, well armed, are occupying different points of the city, and thus far everything is quiet.

The following is the letter addressed by the Post Master General to the Post Master at Charleston, in relation to the delivery of incendiary publications:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,

August 4th, 1835. §

P. M. Charleston, S. C.

Sir: In your letter of the 29th ult., just received, you inform me that by the steamboat mail from New York your office had been filled with pamphlets and tracts upon slavery: that the public mind was highly excited upon the subject: that you doubted the safety of the mail itself out of your possession: that you had determined, as the wisest course, to detain these papers: and you now ask instructions from the Department.

Upon a careful examination of the law, I am satisfied that the Post Master General has no legal authority to exclude papers from the mail, nor prohibit their carriage or delivery on account of their character or tendency, real or supposed;—recently it was not thought safe to confide the head of an executive department, a power over the press, which might be perverted and abused.

But I am not prepared to direct you to forward or deliver the papers of which you speak. The Post Office Department was created to serve the people of each and all of the United States, and not to be used as the instrument of their destruction. None of the papers detained have been forwarded to me, and I cannot judge for myself of their character and tendency; but you inform me that they are in character, "the most inflammatory and incendiary—and insurrectionary in the highest degree."

By no act, or direction of mine, official or private, could I be induced to aid, knowingly, in giving circulation to papers of this description, directly or indirectly. We owe an obligation to the laws, but a higher one to the communities in which we live, and if the former be perverted to destroy the latter, it is patriotism to disregard them. Entertaining these views, I cannot sanction, and will not condemn the step you have taken.

Your justification must be looked for in the character of the papers detained, and the circumstances by which you are surrounded."

Public Taste versus Public Approval.—We will venture to assert what may, at first, seem paradoxical, that while public taste is the true criterion by which we ought to judge of a literary performance, yet public approbation is a very unsafe criterion of literary merit. People in general do not applaud as they approve, nor commend as they admire—but applaud and commend according to the approbation of certain critics, who are their standards of taste—the guides of their opinions and the keepers of their consciences. The public taste is corrupted by the critics, to whom the people are accustomed to look, in order to ascertain what they should think and how they should feel. What would be thought of one who should ask the advice of a friend whether he ought to feel angry with a neighbor who had offended him?

Yet how few are to be found in this enlightened community who have the presumption (as it would be called) to decide whether they are pleased or displeased with a novel, a poem, or any other literary performance, until they have ascertained the opinion of their idol critic? A want of self-reliance is the most prominent foible of this community. We look to the learned as our guides in matters of taste and opinion, without considering that their sensibility is no more acute, and that their reasoning faculties are no more correct on account of their superior erudition.

The Worcester Palladium is vastly witty about the Young Men's Convention—it says every member must rise in season to have his hands and face well washed before breakfast—they would have to get up earlier than ever the editor of the Palladium did, for he is notorious for the unnatural color of his face and hands.

Mr. Harding, the painter, is at Bangor, making pictures of the down Easters.

We should be very happy to accommodate J. G. H., of New Bedford, but it is out of our power.

Not so Green, after all.—We Greenes are not to be trifled with—if any body treads on our toes after this—why—we shall ask them to be more careful in future:

Charles P. Green, the editor of the Boydstown, Va. Expositor, was attacked a few days since in Warrenton, N. C. by two individuals, named Bragg, one of whom he had assailed in his newspaper. A bloody combat ensued. Green was beaten to the ground with a heavy bludgeon, but rising, he drew a dirk, cut the upper lip of one of his assailants nearly off, stabbed him also in the arm, and buried the weapon in the throat of the other, who is expected to die. A Mr Somerville, who interferred to keep the peace, was severely wounded by the explosion of a pistol. At the termination of the fight, Green invited two others of the Bragg family to come on, and take a hand, if they felt disposed! Our civilization goes backward like a crab."

A violent fever has broken out on Central wharf, Boston. Twenty clerks have died. The papers are quite silent on the subject—but it is their policy to be so. Is it the cholera?—N. Y. Morn. Herald.

We shall soon begin to think that the New York editors, in one case at least, are acting on the principle that "a lie well stuck to is as good as the truth." They have been told, over and over again, that there is no yellow fever, or any other contagious disease here, and yet they cannot eke out a paper, without repeating the old story, which has been contradicted times without number. We hope the propagators of these injurious statements are not actuated by a desire to injure the business of the city.

The New York Bowery Theatre opened on Tuesday evening to a crowded audience. The N. Y. Star says—"Just after HAMBLIN, who was playing Hamlet, last evening—exclaimed, "A rat, a rat, dead for a ducat!" a large fat rat walked leisurely across the stage, looking like anything but a dead one, to the evident alarm of the lady who was representing the "Gracious Majesty of Denmark." In the grave yard scene a live bat fluttered over the stage, and hovered around the house the whole evening."

Later from France.—By the packet ship Formosa, Capt. Orne, Paris papers to the evening of July 7th, and Havre to the 8th inclusive, have been received in New York. It is currently reported that the Duke of Bordeaux is dead. Louis Philippe, taking the advice of Talleyrand, has assured the northern powers he will not interfere with Spain.

We are requested to state that all those who are disposed to sign the call for a public meeting to be held in Faneuil Hall, for the purpose of expressing an opinion on the proceedings of the Abolitionists, that papers are left at the Reading Rooms and the Globe Insurance office, and will remain open until Saturday afternoon.

A letter from the Springs to the N. Y. Herald says—"This is a great place—the whole world is here. You can't move a foot without knocking against a beauty or a politician—a rose or a saint—a tailor or a tin pedlar. Congress Hall is full—so is the United States—so is the Pavilion—so is the Union—so are they all. People get up in the morning, drink the water—eat a breakfast like a ploughman—ride out in the forenoon—dress for dinner—eat bad cookery, and drink worse wine—take a siesta or a drive—dance in the evening—and flirt with flirts, or plot plots, at all hours. This is vanity fair. All is outside show. Every body puts the best leg and ankle foremost."

The Industrious Fleas are at the Springs, but it is said they don't bite very sharp.

Dreadful Fire at New York.—One of the most destructive fires that ever occurred at New York took out on Wednesday morning. It commenced in Fulton street, and extended to Ann and Nassau, destroying thirty or forty valuable stores and dwelling houses, and consuming property estimated at over $2,000,000.

Twenty-one of the finest printing offices in town; eleven binderies, including thirteen publishing establishments of newspapers—five of which were large, and eight penny papers, have been among the property destroyed.

There were three churches in constant danger—the Christ Church in Ann street, the Upper Dutch, corner of Ann and William streets, and the Dutch Reformed, corner of Ann and Nassau.

There has not been such a fire in thirty-five years.—The engines collected as early as could be expected, considering the hour of the night. But there seemed an apathy in the owners and occupiers, each believing his building was fire proof, and safe; therefore the loss was immense.

The New York Star of Wednesday evening says:—"At least 500 girls, employed in binderies, and in the shawl business, have been thrown out of employ, and also 500 men, employed in the same, and in the printing and publishing establishments. The scene yesterday morning was heart-rending, when the poor girls came down, and to their astonishment saw the heap of ruins, which was unexpectedly presented to them, whereby they were suddenly thrown into a state of temporary indigence. Many of them were frantic with grief."

The chasm left by this awful conflagration, and which appears the more striking, from the walls of the buildings having tumbled entirely down, extends from Beekman, across Ann into Fulton st.

Insurance at nineteen offices, $215,000.

By the Evening Post, we learn that this disastrous fire resulted in the destruction of twenty-nine front buildings, eleven of which were six stories high, viz. 9 on Fulton street, 12 in Ann street, and 8 in Nassau street, where the fire was still raging, but with abated violence.

The loss of property is variously estimated, but the lowest computation is two millions of dollars. Insurance was effected on $218,000 at 19 different insurance offices. From 800 to 1000 persons are thrown out of employment—and several lives lost, among whom was David Carlisle, a printer, who was sleeping at the time of the fire in one of the printing offices in Ann street, and was burnt to death; also William Pitt, while engaged in the humane effort to assist the deceased.

Among the property destroyed were the book store of Bliss, Wardsworth, & Co.—the printing office occupied by the French Courier and the Old Countryman—printing office and bindery of Wm. E. Dean—office of the N. Y. Transcript—office of Chidells & Devos Corporation—printers and publishers of the Jeffersonian—office of Christian Intelligence and Morning Herald.

Office of the New Yorker, Printing office of G. D. Scott, & Co., Stereotype Foundry of J. S. Redfield, the Roman Catholic Church, the Stereotype Foundry of F. Ripley, Printing Office of Osborne & Buckingham, Bindery and Bookstore of Christian Brown, Paper warehouse of John Campbell, & Co., loss estimated at $150,000, Office of H. Griffin, & Co. Bookbinding and publishing office of Brown Wesser, and Co. publishers of Protestant and Catholic.

The Worcester Palladium is vastly witty about the Young Men's Convention—it says every member must rise in season to have his hands and face well washed before breakfast—they would have to get up earlier than ever the editor of the Palladium did, for he is notorious for the unnatural color of his face and hands.

The Captain of the "Earthquake Volunteers," at Wheeling, Va., has published a notice to his company, "to be prepared to exterminate, without terrible shake, the abominable gang" of gamblers, which it is understood are emigrating to that place from Vicksburg and its vicinity.

Mr. Harding, the painter, is at Bangor, making pictures of the down Easters.

We should be very happy to accommodate J. G. H., of New Bedford, but it is out of our power.

MUNICIPAL COURT.

[Thursday, Aug. 13.]

MASTER AND SERVANT; or which is the Thief?

Two very plausible persons—Thomas Lucas and William Goff—the former an Irishman and the latter an Englishman—were arraigned for one of the most bare-faced larcenies ever attempted in Boston, viz. stealing a box of shoes from the entry of Messrs. Whitney, Allen & Co.'s store in Water-street, in broad day-light. The principal witness against them was a clerk in the store.—

Wm. Whitney, jr.—I was up stairs in the countin room, and heard a noise below, and looking out of the window saw Lucas putting the box on Goff's shoulder—they then walked off together till they came to a store which they entered to get something to drink, after the laid the box down bottom up. I got a couple of hand cartmen, and brought the box and men back to the store, where each one accused the other of having him to carry off the box, and both denied it, and called each other liars.

Court.—Prisoners, you hear the testimony, and you have a right to address the jury. Lucas, you are quite silent on the subject—but it is their policy to be so. Is it the cholera?—N. Y. Morn. Herald.

We shall soon begin to think that the New York editors, in one case at least, are acting on the principle that "a lie well stuck to is as good as the truth."

Court.—Prisoners, you hear the testimony, and you have a right to address the jury. Lucas, you are quite silent on the subject—but it is their policy to be so. Is it the cholera?—N. Y. Morn. Herald.

Lucas—Jintleman of the jury, I had been getting on paints at Mr. Hinsham's, and when I'd be coming to the dooer of the stover in Watther street, this fellow now standing along wid me, was there; and says I tit him "are ye working here, now?" "Nah, I'm not," said he; "but I've got a bit of a job to carry a box of shoe for a man, and wont ye give me lift, and help me put on my shoulder; but first of all, I'd like a taste o drink." Well, I raised the box for him, as he desired to do to—wherein, it is'n for a mechanic to refuse to do the likes o' that for another; and I said—"Well if you want something to quinch yer droth, I don mind giving ye something as we go along." So said he, "we shall pass a Caffee house." "Very well," I made answer; "we will stop accordingly." Wid that, jintleman of the jury, we stopped at the Caffee house. And that's the whole truth, as must appear reasonable unto you. I had no thoughts thin, though I've no doubts now, that he intended to stale the shoes dishonestly, and when he found himself caught in his reguery, he sought to implicate me in his predicament, and get his own neck free. But just look at the man—who is he, what is he?—where does he come from, what does he do? I'll tell you, nobody knows where he comes from; but he does nothing but gets drunk, and has been kicked out of ivy boarding house he ever lodged in the city. And it is upon the evidence of him, that the jury will believe that a poor man, like me, that never daled in shoes, would stale a whole box full whin I could have no chance of selling them. It will be an evil day, whin the likes of him, can take away the character of a man like me, and bring a reproach on my children, by a stain that can never be wiped off for ivar. Jintleman, what I have said must be sufficient to satisfy reasonable min, that he is guilty, and I am intirely innocent of any evil intention.

Court.—Goff, let us hear now what you have to say.

Goff—Gentlemen of the Grand Jury—I met Thomas on the wharf, and he made me to do a little job for him—he made me top-heavy with drinking, and so I'm as innocent as a child unborn. Now this man, all the time he has been standing up, has been telling you nothing but a pack of falsehoods, which he has strung together while he was in jail. He says I've been turned out of my boarding houses, and dont work; but the boot is on the other leg. He is always drunk and never did a day's work since I knew him, while I never lost but three days, which was on account of the weather. He says, too, that I asked him to help me; but he went in first, and asked me to help him, and pointed out the right box. It is not very rational to suppose I'd go after the shoes unless I was required so to do, and this is the game he has played off upon me, and I'm very sorry for it, as this is the first time I was ever brought before a Court of Justice.

The story of each prisoner being equally probable, and there being no testimony to corroborate or controvert either—terrible or the robbery being positively proved—they were both very promptly pronounced guilty by the jury, who were much pushed to preserve their gravity, during the mutually criminating pleadings of the two.

The wall of a building in St. Paul street, Montreal, the interior of which had been recently burnt out, fell on the 4th instant, burin beneath its ruins five laborers, all of whom were killed. Four horses were also killed by the accident.

A lad 12 or 14 years of age lost his life a few days since at New Brunswick, by going into an ice-house to cool himself after been overheated. He was in the employ of Mr Thomas Eastburn, druggist, of that city.

They do not, however, contain any interesting items of intelligence.
